

Abstract

This study explores cost analysis and investment evaluation practices at KAB Steel Industries Limited, focusing on how the company makes strategic decisions related to cost management and capital investment. The research examines financial metrics such as return on investment (ROI), cost of production, and break-even analysis to assess the effectiveness of the company's investment strategies. The findings will help in optimizing cost structures and improving strategic decision-making processes for better financial outcomes.